NYC's Animal Medical Center Secures $4 Million Gift

The Gift Funds the Creation of the Ann and Charles Johnson One Health Institute

(New York, N.Y.- October 15, 2019) The Animal Medical Center (AMC) is pleased to announce a $4 million gift by Ann and Charles Johnson to establish the Ann and Charles Johnson One Health Institute. The Institute will support the One Health approach to medicine, recognizing the growing connection between the health of animals, people, and the environment. As the largest and most comprehensive multi-specialty non-profit animal hospital in the world, this gift will provide the platform from which AMC veterinarians can continue to work collaboratively through interdisciplinary research with leading NYC medical centers to help advance veterinary and human medicine.

“We are so grateful to Ann and Charles Johnson for their generosity and support,” said Kathryn Coyne, Chief Executive Officer at AMC. “Their gift will help AMC continue our commitment to work in partnership with physicians and researchers from medical centers to diagnose, treat, and prevent illnesses in animals and people.”

The Animal Medical Center works collaboratively with leading physicians and researchers at Memorial Sloan Kettering Cancer Center, Mount Sinai School of Medicine, NYU Langone Health, The Rockefeller University, and Weill Cornell Medicine.

“We hope this gift will enable the Animal Medical Center to broaden their One Health collaborations and remain at the forefront of veterinary medicine,” said Ann and Charles Johnson.
